

Matt Renner - Fool me once: Do Plectorrhiza tridentata flowers deceive then reward their pollinators?

Matt Renner is a Systematic Botanist at the National Herbarium of New South Wales, where he has curatorial responsibility for bryophytes, ferns, and forget-me-nots in addition to orchids. He maintains broad research interests, spanning macroevolutionary dynamics to plant-pollinator interactions, but his focus is discovery and documentation of Australia's plants. He has published around 80 papers in international peer-reviewed journals, described more than 30 new species and 1 new genus, and rediscovered two extinct ferns. Orchids were his first botanical love, and he maintains a modest collection focussed on Australian Dendrobium sect. Dendrocoryne.
